'Unusual' setup: Illinois Rep. Dan Rostenkowski's payroll records are sought in a House probe.

Files missing in House probe

Rostenkowski's payroll records, special arrangements investigated

By Paul M. Rodriguez
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

House officials responding to a federal grand jury subpoena focusing on possible ghost employees on Rep. Dan Rostenkowski's staff found a number of the congressman's personnel and payroll records missing, The Washington Times learned.

House officials also learned of "unusual" arrangements set up at the House finance office for the Illinois Democrat, such as providing him the same payroll counselor for the past 13 years instead of rotating the counselor every two years to other congressmen.

The discovery of the missing documents in late September prompted an internal House investigation and speculation among some officials that the missing records relate to the ongoing federal probe of the House post office.

House officials do not know at this time if payroll records for other congressmen may be missing as well, according to current and former congressional and law enforcement officials who spoke to The Times on the condition of anonymity.

Besides the missing documents, officials confirmed that the payroll counselor assigned to Mr. Rostenkowski was recently dismissed and that he since testified before the grand jury about operations at the finance office.

Since his dismissal two weeks ago, the former payroll counselor denied any wrongdoing and is considering legal action against his supervisors to clear his name, other sources said.

The finance office controls the personnel and payroll records for the House and is supposed to rotate its counselors, who handle hiring and salary records for employees, with every Congress or every two years at a minimum.

The officials said the grand jury has a keen interest in the possibility that there may have been ghost employees on Mr. Rostenkowski's payrolls who were paid without working.

As chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, Mr. Rostenkowski can hire staff not only for his congressional district and Washington offices, but also for the tax-writing Ways and Means panel and for the Joint Committee on Taxation. The latter panel consists of members from the House and the Senate who meet on tax policy.

"There are a lot of questions [from the grand jury] about employees that appear on the official House payroll records but who may not have actually worked," said one of the officials.

Besides the subpoena for Mr. Rostenkowski's payroll records, the grand jury also issued subpoenas to top aides on the House Administration Committee, the Joint Committee on Taxation and the finance office to testify this week about personnel and office expense vouchers controlled by the congressman.

The grand jury is trying to determine whether Mr. Rostenkowski is involved in an embezzlement scheme to improperly convert office stamps and expense vouchers for cash and for fraudulent lease arrangements for official cars and offices, sources said.

Along with Mr. Rostenkowski, two Pennsylvania Democrats — former Rep. Joe Kolter and Rep. Austin J. Murphy — were linked to the post office scandal. All three lawmakers denied any wrongdoing and invoked their Fifth Amendment right not to testify before the grand jury.

At least seven former post office employees, including former Postmaster Robert V. Rota, and a former top aide to Mr. Kolter pleaded guilty to various charges, including embezzlement and illegal drug distribution. All are said to be cooperating with the U.S. attorney's ongoing probe.

The new U.S. attorney, former District Judge Eric H. Holder Jr., is expected to decide whether to proceed with the case prosecutors reportedly prepared against Mr. Rostenkowski and others involved in the post office scandal.

His decision — possibly as early as this week — will determine whether the grand jury's authority lapses at the end of this month or is extended under special circumstances with the approval of the Justice Department and the courts.

The fired payroll counselor, who was said to be visiting his parents in Pennsylvania, could not be reached for comment.

Officials in the House and the U.S. Attorney's Office would not comment about their separate probes. A spokesman for Mr. Rostenkowski referred questions to Robert Bennett, the congressman's attorney, but he could not be reached late yesterday.

The House's internal probe is trying to determine how and why confidential personnel and payroll records may have disappeared without being noticed by supervisors over a period of several years.

"There will have to be some sort of public hearing on this because this is not the first time something like this has happened and we find out after the fact," said one of several sources familiar with the issue.

"It certainly has us concerned," said another source. "We just don't know what's missing, and what's worse is we wouldn't have found out that anything was missing if there hadn't been a search to comply with the subpoena."

House officials also are interested in finding out why the normal procedure for rotating payroll counselors at least every two years was not applied in Mr. Rostenkowski's case.

The concept of rotating such clerks is supposed to "cut down on possible fraud or tampering with the records," one of the sources said. "With Rosty, the counselor never rotated off ... even though he [the counselor] would be rotated like everybody else" when it involved other members.

The sources said the fired employee was the only counselor allowed to work on Mr. Rostenkowski's records since at least 1982. Otherwise, he rotated working for other congressmen on a regular basis like other counselors.

"This [arrangement] was done years ago at the specific request of Mr. Rostenkowski," said one of the sources. "Only he [Mr. Rostenkowski] could talk to [the counselor] and that special arrangement was known and approved by everybody in a higher authority" at the finance office, another source said.

Irregularity denied in Rostenkowski files But Foley says records were missing

By Paul M. Rodriguez
THE WASHINGTON TIMES

Speaker Thomas S. Foley yesterday confirmed that payroll records for Rep. Dan Rostenkowski's office were missing when subpoenaed by a federal grand jury investigating the Illinois Democrat's role in the House post office scandal.

Mr. Foley was asked numerous questions at his daily news conference following a report on the missing documents in yesterday's editions of The Washington Times.

The Washington Democrat said the missing paperwork authorizes the hiring of an employee or a change in salary.

"There is no indication that there is any payroll irregularity," Mr. Foley told reporters at his regular news conference. "As far as I know, all of the payroll records are in order . . .

"As far as I know, all of the payroll records [for Mr. Rostenkowski] are in order . . .," Mr. Foley said. "I don't think there is any evidence of" any ghost employees who may have been hired by the congressman.

"I mean, obviously that would be a matter of great concern, but I don't think there is any evidence of it at all," Mr. Foley said.

The speaker said that he was briefed on the matter recently and that as soon as he found out about the missing documents, he ordered staff to inform the U.S. Attorney's Office immediately.

Current and former federal and congressional officials told The Times that the grand jury has been asking numerous questions about the possibility that ghost employees who were paid without working may have been hired by Mr. Rostenkowski, especially in his Chicago district office.

Aides to Mr. Rostenkowski denied there were any employees on the congressman's payroll that did not work.

Among those questioned by the grand jury lately is a fired payroll counselor, who worked exclusively on Mr. Rostenkowski's payroll records for nearly 13 years, instead of being rotated every two years like other counselors.

Mr. Foley said that "in the past, it would not have [been] the same payroll counselor" who would have been assigned to a congressman for so long.

"The routine was to change them," Mr. Foley confirmed. "But I am not aware of any particular circumstances where others were not kept, but there is no strict rule, as I understand, against keeping the same counselor if a member requests it."

Meanwhile, House Republican leaders were reportedly considering holding public hearings on the matter to air out what many consider to be unusual circumstances surrounding the discovery of the missing files and the firing of the career payroll counselor involved.

Another option under Republican consideration is to assign the matter to a newly created office for an inspector general, who is expected to be appointed within the next week to 10 days.

"Something stinks down there, and we need to get to the bottom of it," one Republican member said yesterday, echoing comments of other GOP members when asked if they knew any details about the missing records in the House finance office.

Democratic officials, however, downplayed the seriousness of the missing files based on a preliminary search of backup computer and after-action payroll memos that they believe account for all of the employees hired by Mr. Rostenkowski going back to the late 1970s.

"There's just nothing there," said one Democratic source who asked not to be further identified. "Yes, there are missing documents, but we've been able to go back into the computer records and reconstruct his [Rostenkowski's] payroll activities."

A key aspect to the missing records is that they contain the original signature of Mr. Rostenkowski authorizing any personnel or payroll changes on his staff.

Without the original request forms, there is no proof that the congressman authorized the hiring, firing or salary changes for any employee.

Sources said that the former payroll counselor denied any wrongdoing and is considering legal action against his supervisors to clear his name.

The finance office controls the personnel, payroll and expense records for the House.

The grand jury has spent nearly two years investigating wrongdoing at the House post office, including embezzlement and illegal drug sales, and allegations of money laundering.

So far, six former post office employees and former Postmaster Robert V. Rota have been found guilty, as has a former administrative assistant to former Rep. Joe Kolter, Pennsylvania Democrat.

Mr. Rostenkowski, Mr. Kolter and Rep. Austin J. Murphy, Pennsylvania Democrat, were caught up in the scandal but denied any wrongdoing. All three lawmakers invoked their Fifth Amendment rights to avoid testifying before the grand jury.

While the criminal probe is far reaching, the central target of prosecutors appears to be Mr. Rostenkowski, who reportedly was accused by Mr. Rota of illegally converting thousands of dollars worth of stamps for cash.

[redacted] On September 10, 1993, Special Agent (SA) [redacted]
[redacted] took photographs of vehicles identified as follows:

(Car #1) Ford Taurus, with a partial Vehicle Identification Number (VIN#) BP30U7GG279141, having Illinois license number KMR.

(Car #2) Ford Aerostar, with VIN# 1FMDA31U9KZB33464, having Illinois license number ALF 1349.

(Car #3) Ford Probe, with VIN# 1ZVBT21C3K5172255, having Illinois license number DR 1.

A total of 12 photographs were taken, photographs 1-4 were taken at 9:30AM, and photographs 5-12 were taken at 2:00PM. All of the cars mentioned above were photographed while they were parked on the east side of North Noble Street, Chicago, Illinois, just outside 1347-49 N. Noble, and 1370 W. Evergreen, Chicago, Illinois. Immediately after taking the photographs of each vehicle, SA [redacted] recorded the VIN# of each vehicle on two pieces of note pad. SA [redacted] was unable to read the entire VIN# for the Ford Taurus because a piece of paper, located inside the vehicle, was covering the first three digits. The pieces of note pad are being maintained in a 1A Envelope, and a log identifying the photographs is attached.
